1. A Book Fair I Have Visited

A book fair is an event where books are displayed and sold. In our country, the biggest fair takes place every year at Bangla Academy to honor the martyrs of the 1952 Language Movement. It also promotes our language, literature, and culture. Last year, on February 21st, I visited the fair with some friends who love books. The fair was filled with countless book stalls and a huge crowd of eager readers. There were books of all kinds—novels, poetry, adventure, science fiction, and more. People of all ages were selecting books, and my friends and I bought some literature and science related books. I was excited to see famous writers meeting fans and giving interviews. The atmosphere was lively, with foreign visitors adding to the charm. A seminar under a large tree caught my interest, making the visit even more memorable. This experience reinforced my belief that reading books is the key to knowledge and success.

2. A RAINY DAY

A rainy day is a day when it rains all day long.. The sky remains covered with clouds, and the sun is not visible at all. Sometimes, it rains heavily, and sometimes, there is only a light drizzle. Thunder can often be heard in the sky. Birds sit quietly on tree branches, hiding in the leaves. Cattle stay in their sheds, and people mostly remain at homes. The roads become muddy and empty, making it difficult to go from one place to another. The poor suffer the most because they cannot go out to earn their daily wages. However, for students, a rainy day is a time of joy, as classes are usually canceled. They spend the day playing and chatting with friends. Many people pass the time by gossiping, singing, or listening to music. Children find great joy on a rainy day, running around and playing in the rain. The continuous rain fills poets with emotions and helps them create beautiful poems. Personally, I love rainy days, especially when it rains heavily. I like to sit by the window and listen to the soothing sound of raindrops. Sometimes, I get lost in my thoughts and imagination. In the end, a rainy day brings both happiness and hardship, affecting different people in different ways. [edited by mb]

3. A Rickshaw Puller

A rickshaw puller is a man who earns his livelihood by pulling a rickshaw. He is usually a poor day laborer and is often seen on the streets, carrying passengers and goods for a small fare. Most rickshaw pullers do not own their rickshaws; they rent them from owners on a daily basis. Only a few have their own rickshaws. Since they earn very little, they cannot afford a good home and usually live in slums. A rickshaw puller works long hours, yet his earnings are barely enough to support his family. When bad weather, sickness, or any accident stop them from working, they and their families have to go without food. They work in extreme heat, heavy rain, and dangerous traffic, making their job both exhausting and risky. In busy cities, they have to be very careful to avoid accidents with buses, trucks, and cars. Unfortunately, many passengers do not pay them fairly. Sometimes, arguments happen over fares. Though most of them are polite and respectful, some of them misbehave with the passengers. Despite their hardships, they are an essential part of our life. Interestingly, despite having little formal education, many rickshaw pullers enjoy talking about national politics, sharing their strong opinions on different issues. However, we should ensure that these people can enjoy their fundamental rights properly.

4. A SCHOOL LIBRARY

A library is an essential part of any educational institution, providing books, newspapers, magazines, and journals for students to read or borrow. A school library plays a crucial role in expanding knowledge. Our school has a well-organized library on the ground floor which offers a wide range of books on subjects like science, history, philosophy, politics, and culture. Students can choose books based on their interests, and the books are arranged alphabetically on shelves so that anyone can find them easily. Two staff members manage our library—the librarian, who also helps students find books and gives useful advice, and the assistant librarian, whose work is to issue books. Students can borrow a book for a week using their library cards. Our head teacher is very supportive of the library and ensures that any missing books are added when students request them. Because of his efforts, our library is improving continuously. I am really proud of our school library, as it is well-furnished and highly beneficial for all students.

5. A SCHOOL MAGAZINE

A school magazine is a periodical published by a school, usually once a year. It contains writings from students, including short stories, poems, essays, jokes, and cartoons. Sometimes, contributions from teachers and former students are also included. To publish the magazine, a Magazine Committee is formed, with the Headmaster as the Chief Patron. Three senior teachers act as advisors, and a student from the senior-most class is chosen as the Editor. Assistant editors and other selected members help in the publication process under the guidance of the advisors. The committee collects and selects articles from students before the final selection of the content. Funding for the magazine comes from a magazine fund, and students also raise money by selling advertisement space. Having an article published in the school magazine is a great source of motivation for students. It helps them develop their literary skills and encourages them to keep writing. Over time, some students even go on to become poets, novelists, dramatists, or filmmakers. A school magazine plays an important role in inspiring creativity and nurturing talent among students.

6. A STREET HAWKER

A street hawker is a person who sells different things while moving from one street to another. They are common in towns and villages and often live in small houses or slums. Street hawkers sell various items like toys, bangles, clothes, sweets, fruits, newspapers, and other goods. They carry their products in different ways—on their head, in their hands, or in a small cart. They know how to attract customers by offering things that are interesting to children, women, or men. For example, they bring toys for kids and jewelry or household items for women. As they walk through the streets, they call out loudly to get people's attention. Street hawkers often choose a time when the masters are out of home, and women are free from work, hoping to make good sales. Though some hawkers make a good income, many are poor and have a tough life. Despite their struggles, they deserve kindness and respect. So, everyone should show kindness and honour to these hard working people.

7. A TEA STALL

A tea stall is a small roadside shop commonly found in markets, stations, and terminals, where tea is made and sold. It is a familiar sight to everyone. Typically, it has one or two long tables with benches on either side and a cash counter where the owner or manager sits. A tea stall offers not only tea but also biscuits, cakes, bread, and cigarettes. It opens early in the morning and closes late at night, while some at busy spots like railway or steamer stations operate 24 hours, serving a diverse group of customers including passengers, rickshaw pullers, workers, students, officials, and political activists. Some stalls provide quality tea, with one or two assistants serving tea and snacks. Political leaders and idle elderly people sit for hours discussing politics and current events, turning tea stalls into hubs for political and social exchange. People from various backgrounds share their concerns and thoughts. Newspapers are often available, customers can stay informed about local and global news. Starting a tea stall requires little investment yet offers decent income. Additionally, listening to customers' conversations, stall owners gain knowledge and grow wiser over time. Overall, it makes the tea stall both a refreshment spot and a place for exchanging ideas.

8. A TRAFFIC JAM I EXPERIENCED

Traffic jams are a common issue in Dhaka city, and almost everyone has experienced being stuck at least once in their lifetime. As a class ten student, I face this problem regularly, but last week, I found myself trapped in a heavy traffic jam in the Kalabagan area. The jam lasted for about two hours, and it felt like being stuck in a situation with no way out. I was on my way home from school in a rickshaw when I was forced to stop because of the jam. In front of my rickshaw, a bus was releasing black smoke, which blew in my direction due to the wind. I tried to block the smell by covering my nose with a handkerchief, but it didn't help for long. The constant honking of horns made the situation worse, and the summer heat made me uncomfortable. Besides, the roof of the rickshaw offered little protection from the sun, making me feel dizzy and almost sick. I was uncertain whether I should leave the rickshaw and walk home. Finally, after one hour, the traffic cleared, and I reached home. My family was worried and had even called my school. This experience made me realize how unbearable traffic jams can be.

9. OUR NATIONAL FLAG

The national flag is a piece of cloth with a special and unique coloured design. It is used as the symbol of a particular country. Every nation of the world has a national flag of its own. It is the symbol of the independence of a nation. As an independent country, Bangladesh also has a national flag. We achieved freedom in 1971 at the cost of three million martyrs. The ratio of our flag's length and breadth is 10:6. Our national flag has a green rectangle with a round red circle in the middle. The radius of the red circle is one-fifth of the length of the flag. The green colour represents our green fields and the youthful vigour of our country. The red circle symbolizes the blood of our martyrs who sacrificed their lives for the country. The red circle also stands for the red sun of freedom and hope for the new nation. After nine months of bloody war, Bangladesh became independent on 16th December of 1971. The national flag is hoisted on the premises of every government office, institutes and organizations in Bangladesh. It is kept half-mast on national mourning days. Our national flag reminds us of the supreme sacrifice of our heroic sons. It inspires us to die for the country. We should be determined to uphold the honour of our national flag and do duties to the nation.

10. ENVIRONMENT POLLUTION

Environment pollution refers to the contamination of the natural elements by various harmful pollutants. This pollution can take different forms, such as air pollution, water pollution, soil pollution. All these types of pollution have detrimental effects on both the environment and human health. The rapid industrialization and urbanization have greatly contributed to the increase in pollution levels, as human activities generate a significant amount of waste and emissions that end up in the environment. Air pollution is a major concern as it not only affects the quality of the air we breathe but also contributes to climate change. The burning of fossil fuels, industrial emissions, and vehicular exhaust release harmful gases and particulate matter into the atmosphere. These pollutants can cause respiratory problems, cardiovascular diseases, and even premature death. Additionally, air pollution is a major contributor to global warming. Water pollution is another significant issue that affects our environment. Industrial waste, sewage, and agricultural run-off contaminate freshwater sources such as rivers, lakes, and groundwater. This pollution not only affects aquatic life but also makes the water unfit for human consumption and irrigation purposes. To tackle the problem of environmental pollution, it is crucial to adopt sustainable practices and reduce our dependency on fossil fuels. Governments and industries must invest in renewable energy sources and develop cleaner technologies and everyone needs to be made aware of this issue to minimize the pollution.

11. Load Shedding

Load shedding means the practice of stopping the supply of electricity for a period of time because the demand is greater than the supply. Undoubtedly, it is a great curse in modern life. Unplanned distribution and illegal connection of electricity are mainly responsible for it. When the production of power falls short of the total requirement, the supply of energy suspended temporarily at one area to provide power in another area. Due to load shedding, the big cities and industrial areas suffer the most. Streets are covered with darkness with a few lights of cars and buses flashing here and there. The running machines come to a standstill in mills and factories. The sufferings of the students due to load shedding are beyond description. They sit idly in the dark closing their books. The curse of load shedding does not spare even the hospitals. Medicine kept in refrigerators are damaged. The commodities kept in the cold storages get spoiled. To get rid of this problem, we need to take effective steps to produce adequate power, to ensure planned distribution, to set up more electric plants, to disconnect the illegal connections, to prevent misuse, and to keep open the shopping places and business centres during a specified time. However, without the help of the government, we can't succeed. The Govt. should take steps as early as possible.

12. A Farmer

A farmer is a person who works in agriculture and cultivates crops and raises animals. They are responsible for producing and providing foods for people around the world. Most of the time, the life of a farmer is very challenging and requires hard work, dedication, and a lot of patience. Farmers wake up early in the morning and work throughout the day, usually until the sun sets. They often work outdoors, in all kinds of weather conditions, such as rain, sun, and wind. They use different types of tools and equipment, such as tractors, ploughs, and harvesters, to maintain their crops and fields. Farmers also take care of their animals, such as cows, sheep, and chickens to ensure they are fed, healthy, and safe. Despite the hard work and long hours, they enjoy their work, as they have a close connection with nature and the land. They take pride in producing high-quality food for their communities and contributing to the food industry. Beside being challenging, the life of a farmer is also rewarding and plays an important role in feeding the world's population. However, providing seeds, loans and fertilizers, the government can provide these heroes what they deserve.

13. Benefits of Early Rising

Early rising refers to the habit of waking up early in the morning that transforms your daily life. It has numerous benefits, including improved productivity and mental well-being. One of the main advantages is having extra time to plan the day and complete essential tasks. Early risers often can study or exercise without distractions which helps them focus better and work more efficiently. This significantly impacts academic performance and overall productivity throughout the day. Moreover, waking up early positively affects mental health. Early risers start their day with a sense of achievement. This leads to increased energy and a positive mindset, which can help reduce stress and anxiety and make it easier to tackle daily challenges. Being an early riser can be difficult for many people. To make it easier, stick to a regular sleep schedule. Strategies like reducing screen time in the evening and sticking to a consistent wake-up schedule can help you build this habit. Early rising can lead to a healthier lifestyle by promoting better daily routines and more time for self-care activities. It helps people develop good habits that improve their well-being and lead to success in life. Everyone should try to be an early riser for a better life.
